Here's two quick sample comments from the above article as well. You need to reign in these kinds of abuses if you want IoT to grow:

1:

"Legislation - Unfortunately, legislation for crap like this doesn't exist.

I don't mind the fact most politicians are ignorant when it comes to technology, but their job is to protect us. So they should at least hire some tech experts and advisors.

When it comes to anything dealing with technology, they are way behind and only do something after a large number of people have been badly affected in some way.

Try to keep this in mind the next time you vote. :)"

2:

"I'm glad my cell phone isn't smart...

There does seem to be a trend to this.. We keep your data. We own everything on your phone. We're always watching. We will "share" (let's be honest and change that to "we will sell") your data. And we'll change the EULA anytime we feel like it an never tell you.

I keep hoping that users will start getting a clue and just say "no, we're not going to use this since you're spying on us". Maybe if enough users would, the companies would get a clue and change their ways before they go bankrupt."
